a valid windows 10 product key is required to activate windows 10. if you have a valid windows 10 installation media, you can use the media to activate windows 10. if you do not have a valid windows 10 installation media, you can follow the steps in this topic to activate windows 10 without a valid media. there are multiple reasons why upgrading to windows 10 is such a good move, one of them is that windows 10 is designed from the ground up for the future of your pc, your smartphone, and your tablet. another reason is that you can take your pc and all the software you use with you, wherever you go, with you, so you can get more done wherever you are. windows 10 home n can be installed on a new pc that is either pre-installed with windows 10 home or later upgraded to windows 10 home. windows 10 home n is also available for some of your existing pc that is pre-installed with windows 10 home. when you first install windows 10 home, you will be asked to insert a product key. you will need to provide this product key when you sign in to windows as it will be needed to activate the windows. we recommend you to use a product key from a genuine windows 10 product key that is available online. if you would like to activate windows 10 on a different computer, you will need the original product key that was supplied when you first purchased it. alternatively, you may have received a microsoft product key for a previous version of windows 10 (for example, windows 10 home n). the windows reset tool will reset your windows, but you will need to re-install any applications and drivers you have downloaded from the internet. this also means that your account information will be lost.
